

YOUR CAMPUS CAN BE READY

When every school in the Golden State becomes a hub for healthy relationships, we'll make progress in preventing another generation from having to experience domestic violence into adulthood. Your campus can be ready! To get started, visit cpedv.org/prevention or contact info@cpedv.org.

MEET
CASEY & TAYLOR, AGE 16

Without a School Policy that Promotes Healthy Relationships

Casey comes from an abusive home and starts to act controlling toward Taylor.

With a School Policy that Promotes Healthy Relationships

Casey won't allow Taylor to talk to classmates during group work, preventing Taylor from concentrating on school. Both of their grades suffer.

ISOLATION

Casey yells at Taylor at school. Students nearby feel nervous. Their teachers don't know how to respond.

Casey's abusive behavior causes Taylor's anxiety to spike. Taylor can't focus on school work.

Casey pressures Taylor into quitting the debate team. Taylor feels alone and afraid to talk to adults about it. Taylor suffers in silence.

A ROCKY PATH LIES AHEAD

High school ends.

Taylor and Casey move in together.

The abuse escalates.

Taylor tries to leave.

With no support or money, Taylor feels stuck and returns to Casey.

ESCALATES

Because of school's training, Taylor's teacher recognizes the signs of abuse and offers Taylor a referral to a supportive counselor.

SUPPORT

The school's policy also requires student education by trained advocates. Taylor and Casey join their friends in learning about respectful, supportive relationships.

CONFIDENTIAL HELP

The counselor provides confidential help to Taylor and works with Casey separately.

Working with community advocates and school staff, both Taylor and Casey decide to become student mentors.

By knowing what a healthy relationship looks like, Taylor and Casey are able to have the confidence to focus on school.

HEALTHY RELATIONSHIP KNOWLEDGE

Both Taylor and Casey can develop outside interests.

Taylor continues with the debate team.

Casey takes up watercolor painting in the art club.

OPPORTUNITIES

High school ends, opportunities open up for Casey & Taylor.
